Recent studies have indicated that the Down syndrome (DS) gene products trisomy 21 may interfere with the immune system, leading to impaired specific immunity, a decreased number of NK cells, and impaired responses of lymphoid cells to interleukin 2 (IL-2) and IL-1. The evidence for each of these observations is reviewed. It is hypothesized that an altered immune system in DS, acting as a weak antigenic stimulus, leads to an absence of the immune response to the antigens which it is not responding to, but which could potentially be a pathogen. This would leave the individual vulnerable 4bc0debe42
